Snow Covered Plains of Flanders Play Havoc With Leaders' Plans

In West Belgium, Dec. 17.—Maneuvering and out-maneuvering one another by the pale light of the moon—when there is a moon—the soldiers of both armies now bleed, now curse the snow. It is, on the whole, more unwelcome than otherwise, because nothing can be more treacherous in disclosing the position of the trenches. When thin dark lines stretch across across in the dim distance becomes untenable.

Show of late, has worked havoc with the tactics of both sides. It has led to the tactics of both sides. It has led to hasty removals of infantry from one position to another. It has brought death, too, to many a brave man who had hitherto held an impregnable position.

Show is, in fact, dictating the fighting they lately have been but few infantry movements, for no general will allow his men to operate over a white background. So the fighting is left for big guns, while the infantry waits patiently and bravely for the issue.

They have waited now many weeks, and are still waiting. I have just met a bombardier of the Royal Field Artillery who began fighting at Mons on August 10, and stuck to his gun till last Friday, when he received a few days' leave.

He had gone through the ordeal at Mons, the Marne, and on the Aisne, and more recently at Ypres. Little and La Bassée, and no man alive felt fitter than this fair-haired Saxon. Indeed the general fitness of the British soldiers is the secret of their powers of endurance.

Narrating some of his experiences the bombardier summed up the German methods of fighting in a homely sentence:—"They have been coming at us like bees at a jam pot, but there's to be no more retreating on our side, and when the Germans make their next move it will be a mow-hawk."

You have over a million chaps coming over to help us, haven't you?" "Yes," I said, "and we will have a second million, too."

"Thank God! We talk of nothing else in the trenches but of our million recruits. And we all hope we shall be alive on the day when they are standing by us."

WRITES ABOUT NIBLACK CASE

SCARED WIDOW TO DEATH JUMP

County Attorney Pope Says Derwin and Niblack Cases Are Awaiting the Action of the Grand Jury.

County Attorney D. K. Pope today took the sitting out of the charge made by M. E. Trapp in the Niblack and Derwin cases in a letter addressed to Governor Bruce in which he states that the defendants are now under bond and that he has never had any intention of dismissing them. Pope says in his letter:

"Answering your letter of the 15th instant, addressed to D. K. Pope and H. Y. Thompson, relative to the case of the state of Oklahoma vs. Leslie Niblack and H. D. Derwin, the same being called to your attention by the letter of M. E. Trapp, I beg to advise you that H. Y. Thompson has called my attention to his reply to your letter, and I think he has given you a correct statement of these cases, and I will therefore not go into detail concerning them."

Prosecutor Shannon declares he will produce circumstantial evidence proving that Niblack made love to Mrs. McCombs and induced her to make a will giving her the bulk of her $30,000 estate. Then says Shannon, Niblack purposely frightened Mrs. McCombs into jumping out of an automobile while it was descending a steep mountain road in Laurel canyon.

The defense claims the tragedy was an accident and due to a defective brake on the machine. Nutall is 28 years old.

EMPEROR THANKS SOLDIERS ON VISIT TO BATTLE FRONT

Kars, Transcaucasia, Dec. 17.—Emperor Nicholas reached here December 13 from Petrograd. He visited a local hospital where he distributed medals to the wounded. Later he looked over the fortifications of war.

SMITH'S TALKS ON PROSPERITY

By Paul B. Smith, Secretary Home Products and Manufacturers Association and Oklahoma State Manufacturers Association.

I talked with another man, a day or two ago, who has just returned from an absence of several months from the city. This man is owner of large property and other interests in Oklahoma and Oklahoma City and his recent trip took him into several states, including New York.

"It's the brightest spot I've seen in all my trip," he said on being asked the question, "How does Oklahoma City look to you as compared with other cities you've been in lately?"

And he went on to particularize, telling how the eastern cities had stagnated under the shock of the beginning of the war and its paralysis of American trade—a shock that the west hardly felt—and of many other causes that prevail throughout that section of the country.

Before he left these conditions were beginning to be relieved by the renewing of foreign business and the general readjustment of things. But entirely aside from conditions that may be blamed upon the war, he declared that Oklahoma has them bested by far as to the average condition of the people.

If the people of Oklahoma will work together for the building up and development of the state as a whole, encouraging home enterprises of every kind by their interest and patronage, this man of big business confidently believes that nothing will hold us back from the greatest era of prosperity the state or the city have ever known.
